

Interview with Sean Buvala Talking Points/Questions

- * Why is something so simple as telling a bedtime story so important to our children?
- * You make a point about the difference between reading stories and telling stories. Can you tell me more about that?
- * What are some of the long-term benefits of telling stories to our children?
- * You say that storytelling is a two-way activity. Do parents really benefit when they tell stories to their kids?
- * How do we encourage language development in our children through storytelling?
- * In your book, DaddyTeller, you focus very much on helping Dads learn the storytelling skill. Why the focus on men?
- * Can your book be used by mothers as well?
- * How does a dad get started in telling stories to his child?
- * Your DaddyTeller book is a small, simple book. Was that design intentional?
- * You mention literacy skills in your book and website. Do you really believe that storytelling to and with our children helps them get better grades in school?
- * But isn't it the job of the school to teach our kids to read?
- * Your website has some free downloads. When someone goes to www.daddyteller.com, what features will they find there?
- * I understand that your DaddyTeller book is in both Ebook and printed formats. How do people order your book?
